the following words: "The peace of the country and the per-patuity of the Union have been put in leop-ardy by attempts to interfere with, and to control the domestic affairs of the people in the Territories, through the agency of the the Territories, through the agency of the Federal Government.

"If the power and the duty of the Federal interference is to be conceded, two hostile sectional parties must be the inevitable result; the one inflaming the passions and ambition of the North, and the other of the South, and each struggling to use the Federal power and authority for the aggrandizement of its own section, at the expense of the equal rights of the other, and in derogation of those fundamental principles, the principles of self-government, which were firmly established in this country by the American Revolution as the basis of our entire Republican system."

Mr. Douglas makes no distinction in intervention by any department of Government-He includes all intervention "through the agency of the Federal Government" as precipitating a sectional conflict and putting the Union in jeopardy; in fact he proclaims intervention to be the very irrepressible conflict This is just. If intervention is disunion, i makes no difference which department of the Government intervenes. Therefore Mr. Douglas was consistent in denouncing equally all intervention "through the agency of the Federal Government." To say that intervention by one department of the Governmentthe Legislative for instance-is putting the Union in jeopardy, but intervention by another department-the judicial for instance-will preserve the Union and establish harmony, is an absurdity that Mr. Douglas could not be guilty of. His clear and states manlike mind sees, of course, that a political evil is far less dangerous while it is in the control of a legislative body directly responsible to the people, than it would be in an irresponsible body placed entirely beyond reach of the people by a life tenure of office, and controlled solely by their own decisions; therefore he plants himself boldly on the ground that all intervention "through the agency of the Federal Government" is sec salism and disunion.

Many will find it difficult to understand how protection to rights of property which Mr. Douglas recognizes as having a constitutional existence in the Territories, can have such dire effects; how protection of property, which is supposed to be the chief necessity for forming government, should be its de struction; but no one can question Mr Douglas's sincerity in the belief he has declared; and his lively apprehensions for the safety of the Union are highly creditable to

Mr. Douglas in his letter also indorses the platform with the codicil added at Baltimore hich is as follows:

"That during the existence of the Territ "Inst during the existence of the Territorial governments the messure of restriction whatever it may be, imposed by the Federal Constitution on the power of the Territorial Legislature over the subject of slavery, as the same has been or may havenfur be finally determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, should be respected by all good citizens and enforced with promptness and fidelity by every branch of the General Government."

It seems by this that if the Court has de cided against the power of a Territorial Legisature to restrict slavery, it binds every department of Government, executive, legislative and judicial, to intervene to enforce the decision; so that whether Mr. Douglas is already on a platform of intervention, which means disunion and sectional conflict depends solely on the question whether the Court has already decided this point. When Mr. Douglas was in full communion with the Democratic party, the President, in his official message, declared that the Court had so decided, and Mr. Douglas did not protest. If not decided then, as soon as the Court shall decide, Mr. Douglas's platform will be in favor of intervention, which is sectional con-ict and disunion All must concede to Mr. Douglas the right to define his own position, and it is highly honorable to him that after his nominationa thing which usually closes the mouths of candidstes—he has defined his position with such clearness. If he has made the dividing line between his position, and disunion and sectional conflict, inappreciable, even now, and temporary in any event, it is all the more creditable to his candor.

Moral Progress on the Pacific. The improvement in morals and religion in California is very encouraging. A Convention of Sanday-School Teachers recently adopted a resolution deprecating dancing at Sunday-School pienies.

The Grand Jury of San Francisco recently sent a notice to a church fair that grab-hags and raffles would not be allowed.

A gift-jewelry concern was recently pounced upon, and several of the regular jewelers subscribed a fund to carry on the persecution. One of them was prosecuted for perjury in returning his stock to the assessor at $11,900, when it was worth $56,000.

A Justice of the Peace found the Sa Francisco Bulletin guilty of violating the law against obscure publications, by publishing Mrs. Sickles's letter that she got up to suit her husband's taste, without putting stars in the place of some of the hard words. The in compared the Justice to Squire Dogberry, whereupon the Justice-one Hudson -- sued the Bulletin in two courts for libel, laying his damages at $30,000 in each—a large price for writing him down what the other Dogberry desired so earnestly.

THE LAST California Legislature passed a law spessing a tax of four stollars a month on the e crab-fishers. Present Condition of the Romagna-Th People's Opinion of Pto None.
A correspondent of the London Chronici writes as follows from Ancona, June 2: On Wednesday evening, the 30th of May, I found myself at the Hotel des Postes, at Bologna, for the purpose of taking my place in the Courrier for Rimini. On entering the court-yard I was astonished at the sight of an escort of soldiers who were loading their models. The state operating they mounted muskets. After this operation they mounted a kind of covered cart, drawn by three post-horses, which was destined to follow us on our journey.

I turned to the passenger who occupied the seat next to mine in the lumbering vehicle for an explanation of this phenomenon. He was a corpulent avocato of the city we were leaving.

was a corpulent accease of the city we were leaving.

"It is only the escort," said he, quietly.

"What," I exclaimed, "an escort! Are we then threatened with danger on the road? I thought the country was quiet."

"You are right," replied my new acquaintance: "the country is quiet, and the escort is merely an indispensable precaution—one of those little inconveniences, in fact, we have inherited from the former Government. You see, before the revolution of last year we had two powers here, and two sets of police. The Austrians found they had quite enough to do with political offenses, without troubling themselves about crime of any other kind, so that the robbers had it all their own way, and to such an extent that in Bologna a bank was robbed in broad day, and within sight of an Austrian sentry, who, no doubt, thought it was no affair of his—robbing a bank having nothing to do with political conspiracy. The Pontifical authorities were supposed responsible for the suppression of crime, but, in reality, they only busied themselves with trying to discover what were the real opinions of persons suspected of Liberal tendencies. Assassinations and robberies real opinions of persons suspected of Liberal tendencies. Assassinations and robberies still continued. Not even the police agents had any interest in re-establishing order, or in dispersing the numerous banditti that infested the roads.

"The fact was that the Government gave a good round sum to the Legate for police purposes who put two-thirds of it in his own pocket, and handed over the remainder to the two or three superior functionaries, who divided it among themselves so that nothing remained for the police-agents and gendarmes but their bare ordinary pay. They were not even paid their expenses on their professional expeditions, and they of course gave themselvas listin are no touble to huat dawn of fenders, while their chiefs, on the other hand, took especial care not to listen to any charges of blame in the matter. However, as the took especial care not to listen to any charges of blame in the matter. However, as the roads swarmed with brigande, the Government mails and treasures were protected by excerts. As for simple individuals, they did as well as they could; and if they complained of having been robbed or mattreated, they were answered gravely, that if they had remained at home, it would not have happened." "But," said I, "the Romagns now belongs to the King; has not an end been put to this state of things?" "Certainly there has, but the habits and morals of a population can not be changed in makes: I have never in all my experience found I have never in all my experience found snakes to be the aggressors, naless you get them into a cul de sac, or during their period of breeding. Then the cobra is indeed terrible, and I was chased by one at Tellicherry for nearly half an hour, escaping the brute only by doubling quickly round until I stumbled over a stout bamboo, with which weapon I soon dispatched it. At the best of times it is nervous work coming to close quarters with the cobra; one false aim, and you are a dead man. People have a notion that the with the cobra; one false aim, and you are a dead man. People have a notion that the green snake of India—which is certainly a pretty specimen, if any thing in the shape of a snake can be pretty—is harmless; I can prove to the contrary. One day I saw a beautiful mango bird dangling from a bough of a bamboo-bush; the glare was intense, and I wore blue spectacles, for which reason, perhaps, I could not well distinguish the cause of the phenomenon, and supposing it to have been trapped by some wile, I seized the bird as a great prize, for I was making a collection to bring home with me.

In a second afterward, the glass of my right eye spectacle was shattered to pieces,

In a second afterward, the glass of my right eye spectacle was shattered to pieces, and I hardly recovered from my amazement, when the snake, disappointed of his aim, wriggled off into the thickest of the bush. The glasses saved my eye and my life, for the poor mango bird was riddled through and through the head, from one eye to the other, and every atom of brain had been abstracted. They are dainty, gentlemen some of these snakes, and I was well acquainted with one that preferred turkey's eggs for his breakfast to any other. I used to watch my turkeys as they strayed about the grounds, and mark their nests, leaving them undisturbed until they began to sit. One hen had fixed upon a myrtle-bush, round which she used to flutter and scream every day, poking her stupidmyrtie-bush, round which she used to flutter and scream every day, poking her stupid-looking head out in so strange a fashion that I was once induced to watch her. No sooner had she deposited her egg, than a cobra made his appearance, and with the greatest dex-terity aucked the egg. With greater wisdom than the fabled destroyer of the goose and the golden eggs, the cobra spared the turkey to supply his daily breakfast.

nishes the following:

In the town of Pittsfield, Vt., east of and near the Green Mountains, a singing-school was in progress last Saturday evening in a school-house. A thunder-shower arose and passed over the house. A discharge of electricity came dawn the chimney and passed through the hand of a young man who was sitting near the chimney, with his arm stretched out toward it on the back of a seat. The ladies hoops were struck by the fluid, stripped of all their windings, clasps broken, the hoops bent into all sorts of shapes, dresses scorched, and wonderful to relate, no one was killed, and none injured but the young man. This suggests the new and important idea of ladies dropping their hoops on the near approach of a violent thunderstorm.

night, in Eighteenth-street, by some person as yet unknown.

Warrants are out for the arrest of Charles and Edward Jeffard, who are supposed to have committed the double murder. They are sons of a former husband of Mrs. Waiton.

Mr. Walton was a man of from forty to forty-five years of age, energetic in appearance, and stoutly built. He has many relations in the city, and was highly esteemed by all acquaintances.

Mr. Mathews was a railroad-contractor, and about thirty-four years of age. He lived with his mother, at No. 31 Union Place. He had been absent all day on a pleasure excursion, with his sister, to the filhsing-banks. On returning he had gone to the upper part of the city to transact some business, and had just stepped from the Third-avenue cars on his return, when he heard the cry of "murder," and starting in pursuit of the murderer, met his death.

A pistol, found near the scene of the last murder, has been identified as one recently in the possession of one of the Jeffards.

Edward Jeffard was taken into custody to-day at the Jefferson Market Police Court, which he entered to make some inquiries of the presiding magistrate.

Defing my recent trip to the East I has quently been asked to point out which of the unes professing to give a history of Mr. Life career I could recommend, and necessity has pelled me to say that neither one was in the lea suitisfactory, or presents any adequate idea of h character or history. I think Mr. Barrett has supfor the coming campaign.
